A book you might like - THE MEANING IS IN THE SHADOWS

For more than four decades Peter McVerry has committed himself to the welfare of the homeless in Dublin.

Peter McVerry was born in Belfast in 1944 and grew up in Newry, where he attended a Christian Brothers Grammar School. He was then sent to boarding school at Clongowes Wood College in Kildare. It was while here that he first began to consider joining the Order, and so when he finished school in 1962 McVerry entered the Jesuit novitiate. He studied chemistry and mathematics at UCD, graduating with a bachelor's degree in 1968. He then attended the Jesuit School of Theology in Milltown Park, after which as part of his training he taught at Belvedere College.

Peter McVerry has published a book of writings, called The Meaning is in the Shadows, in which he describes his experiences with those forgotten by society and the systemic faults which allowed this. He remains heavily involved in the lives of the homeless in Dublin and continues his relentless mission both in caring for those in need and in calling into question the aspects of our society which have failed them.

Pitfalls in the Terminology of Sacrifice

Dr Tom O'Loughlin

Zoom: Thursday Nov 3rd 2022
at 8.00 PM

According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, the sacrament of the Mass - the Eucharist - is called 'the Holy Sacrifice because it makes present the one sacrifice of Christ the Saviour and includes the Church's offering'. (1330)

In September 2022 Archbishop Eamon Martin asked Irish Catholics to think of making 'personal sacrifices in answer to the cry of the Earth'.

And yet Christian ideas of sacrifice have been blamed by some historians for much of the violence of history, including the Crusades, the expansion of European imperialism and colonialism from c.1450, and the bloodletting of World War I.

So how are we to understand Christian sacrifice today, faced with 21st century challenges?

In examining aspects of the history of the idea of sacrifice, Dr Tom O'Loughlin, emeritus professor of historical theology at Nottingham University, will deal with "some of the pitfalls in the way we use the terminology of sacrifice".

'Sacrifice' is just one of a number of terms and concepts that can raise issues for the forming of an adult Christian faith. We are hoping to follow this talk with others on similar familiar but problematic terms. Suggestions for those will be welcome, at info@acireland.ie.

He then attended the Jesuit School of Theology in Milltown Park, after which as part of his training he taught at Belvedere College.

At the age of thirty McVerry volunteered to work with the poor in Summerhill on Dublin's Northside. Here he lived in a tenement flat with two other Jesuits. The conditions in the area were appalling, with high levels of poverty and unemployment. For the first time he saw the problems and issues affecting a level of society he had to this point had little contact with. He quickly gained a reputation as a vocal critic of planners and politicians who failed to provide the services needed by these disadvantaged inner-city communities.

In 1979 McVerry opened a hostel for homeless boys aged twelve to sixteen. He saw that for these children, once they were too old to stay at the hostel they had no other option but to live on the streets. The following year he moved out to Ballymun, where he continued his work; with the passing of the Childcare Act in 1991, he was better able to leverage the authorities into action. In 1983 McVerry founded The Arrupe Society, which would later become the McVerry Trust, a charity to tackle homelessness. This organisation began as a three bedroom flat in Ballymun, but has since grown to include eleven hostels for the homeless and a drug detox centre.

McVerry has published a book of writings, called The Meaning is in the Shadows, in which he describes his experiences with those forgotten by society and the systemic faults which allowed this.
